Abstract

This page will be your abstract, a short comprehensive summary of the paper. Your abstract should be no more than 250 words and will be in paragraph form with no indentions on the first line. This element is generally not required for student papers but your instructor may want one included in the paper, if it is not needed delete this page. At the end of the abstract you will list some of the keywords describing your paper. This line will be indented and Keywords will be in italics.

Keywords: student papers, APA style, APA format, writing tutorial

Title of Your Paper in Bold and Centered

Now you can start the body of your paper. This first section under the title acts as your introduction. You do not need to add a header for the introduction. This section should be about a paragraph or so depending on the required length and detail of your paper.

First Level Header

This will be the first major section of your paper. The header will be centered and in bold. If this portion of your paper will be broken down into smaller sections use the headers to indicate that each is a subsection of the previous heading level. There are five heading levels with each following their own capitalization, bold, italicized, and indentation rules.

Second Level Header

The second level header will be flush with the left margin, be in bold, and all major words are capitalized. The text of this section starts as a new paragraph.

Third Level Header

The third level header will be flush with the left margin, be in bold and italics, and all major words are capitalized. The text of this section starts as a new paragraph.

Fourth Level Header. The fourth level header should be indented .5 inches, in bold, with all major words capitalized, and ending with a period. The text of this section will begin on the same line and continue as a normal paragraph.

Fifth Level Header. The fifth and final level of heading should be indented 0.5 inches, be in bold and italics, all of the major words capitalized, and ending with a period. The text will begin on the same line and continue as a normal paragraph.
